

CREELMAN DESCRIBES "FIGHTING BOB" EVANS AND TELLS OF HIS APPOINTMENT FROM UTAH

"Fighting Bob" Evans is made the subject of a powerful character sketch by James Creelman, published in the current issue of Pearson's. Local color is given the story by reference to Evans' appointment to Annapolis from Utah and his memorable trip across the plains to acquire a residence in Salt Lake City.

While living here he had made his home at the residence of his benefactor, Delegate William H. Hooper. The latter, with two of his daughters, now Mrs. Willard Young of Salt Lake and Mrs. Libby Hooper Dunbar of Los Angeles, visited the admiral at Washington twenty-five years ago. A third daughter, Mrs. Joseph E. Caine, also lives in Salt Lake.

Mrs. Young, in speaking yesterday of the visit at Washington, said her attention was especially attracted to the wonderful headwork done by Evans on his long cruises abroad. She said her father, up to the time of his death, twenty-four years ago, always took a lively interest in Evans and kept in close touch with his career.

Turning Point in Life.

Leading up to the great turning point in Evans' life, Creelman says: "Little Bob Evans was a sturdy lad with long, light curls, a blue velvet suit and a feather in his cap. When 6 years old he owned a gun, a pony and a negro boy. He learned to smoke and chew tobacco. His nurse was an affectionate black 'mammy' who lived for 102 years.

"When Bob was 10 years old his father died, and the boy went to live in Washington with an uncle, a newspaper man who was clerk to a congressional committee. He entered the Gonzaga college, where he learned, among other things, a smattering of Greek and Latin. Much of his spare time was spent about the rooms of the capitol, where he attracted the attention of many prominent men.

"One day, Mr. Hooper, the delegate in congress from the territory of Utah, halted the little fair-haired Virginian and asked him how he would like to be appointed to the Naval academy at Annapolis. Bob at once poured out his heart and declared that it was his dearest wish.

"Mr. Hooper said that if young Evans would go to Salt Lake City and become a resident the appointment would be made. That was in 1859.

Lad Starts West.

"Bob was only 13 years old, but he eagerly set out for the Mormon capital. He traveled alone by train to St. Joseph, Mo. There he was met by friends, who arranged that he should cross the plains with a party of five bound for California.

"Mounted on a large gray mule, the future senior rear admiral of the Amer-

"While he was acquiring a legal residence in Salt Lake City he saw much of the early Mormons, and had a talk with Brigham Young. He had a good chance, too, to study the primordial American, for the noble red man used to come into the city, get drunk and shoot arrows at people. A tipsy Indian sent an arrow at Bob, who replied to the jest with a shotgun, and they picked shot out of him until after dark."

"But the call of the sea was stronger than the bewitchment of the adventuresome west, and in 1859 Bob was entered at Annapolis and sent on board the frigate Constitution as an acting midshipman.

"It takes a strong ancestry and hard, brutal experience to make a man like Admiral Evans. Such a spirit is partly an inheritance; and partly a hammered-out product; and of the rough, bluff temper and the almost boyish romanticism of tender years are projected in his person against the pale science of today. It must be remembered that much of his life has been worked out through adventures and trials that make fiction seem tame.

"In all the seas and all the cities that have known Evans he has been recognized as a natural leader and fighter. In spite of his hearty good-nature, there was always something about his face and eyes, something in the set of his mouth and the swing of his step that marked him as a hotspur; but it was not until 1891 when he was sent in command of the Yorktown to assist Captain Schley of the Baltimore, whose crew had been attacked in the harbor of Valparaiso, Chile—it was not until then that he received his famous nickname 'Fighting Bob'."

"It was a dramatic situation, tingling with a sense of impending bloodshed, for the United States and Chile were on the verge of open war. Evans had only the guns and crew of the little Yorktown, for the Baltimore had gone away. He was confronted in the harbor with ten powerful forts and a modern Chilean squadron. Yet in the teeth of that peril, he twice saved his flag from insult and twice covered the haughty Chileans by threatening to open fire without further parley.

"No Chilean dared trifle with that intrepid American officer, and there can be no doubt that it was his firmness and his open readiness for battle that prevented the Chilean navy from seizing the refugees taken on board the Yorktown from the American legation.

Itching for a Fight.

When the United States and Spain were trembling with passion over the situation in Cuba, Captain Evans was in command of the battleship Indiana. The McKinley administration was doing everything in its power to ally the popular desire for armed intervention in Cuba. One morning the captain called on Secretary of State Hay.

Can You Use Food When You Get It?

Thousands of Stomachs Starving Where Mouths Are Well Fed—Costs Nothing to Relieve This Condition.

Eating is fast becoming too much a part of routine, that it is not merely tickling of the appetite—a thing to be gotten out of the way as quickly as possible. Little thought is given to "what kind of food," its effect upon the system, and whether it will be of use in building up the tissues of the body. Your stomach will revolt, if it is not already doing so. It must shut up for repairs. What the digestive, and sometimes pain, which stop you after a hurried lunch? What the general distress after a heavy dinner, a feeling of pressure against the heart, a sense of a halt and makes the breathing difficult? Is it common for you to be oppressed with belching and sour eructations? Are you constipated and then do you laughingly toss a dime to the drug-store for his medicine?

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets contain nothing but the natural elements which enter into the healthy stomach and intestines to perform the function of digestion. Governmental tests and the investigation of physicians and all reliable chemists attest this fact. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets go to the source of the trouble, positively restore the glands and fluids of the mucous membrane to their proper condition. They promptly relieve the distress of all troubles originating in the stomach or bowels (with the one exception of cancer).

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are recommended by physicians and all reliable pharmacists. If you are a sufferer from indigestion or dyspepsia, try a fifty-cent package today. At all druggists, or if you prefer, send us your name and address and we will gladly send you a trial package by mail free. F. A. Stuart Co., 63 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

Trained to the Minute.
"Science isn't killing the personal fighting quality of our men," said the admiral a few weeks ago; "but it is calling for more intelligence and is drawing the finest youth of the country to our flag. The gunners? Well, I think they have been trained to the danger limit of rapidity. Victory or defeat, with a squadron like this facing a squadron of equal quality, would probably be a matter of seconds."

"Just before he sailed to take command of the Asiatic fleet four years ago, the admiral called on President Roosevelt.

"What are your instructions?" he asked.

"Admiral," said the president, "I want you to feel every night when you go to bed that you are better prepared to fight than when you got up that morning."

"Those were the best instructions I ever got," said the admiral, and I have honestly tried to carry them out ever since."

"Lovers of the American navy believe that the next honor conferred on 'Fighting Bob' Evans will be the rank of vice admiral, yet to be created by congress."

Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans.

ican navy went out into the great wilderness. He helped to hunt buffalo and was in several exciting Indian fights.

"Once the little party was ambushed by a band of Blackfeet, but after a sharp fight, in which Bob did his share, they managed to escape. There were three ugly arrows sticking in Bob's gray mule and another shaft had gone through his left ankle, pinning it to the mule. That unhappy animal danced about in agony until he was lassoed and the boy was released by having the arrow cut between his ankle and the mule's side.

"That was a wonderful journey for Bob, full of life and color, the vast loneliness of the plains offering a strange contrast to the shut-in majesty of the Virginia mountains. Again and again the party was attacked by savages, and Bob learned how to watch and how to fight.

Chief Would Adopt Him.
"It seems hard to believe it now, but on that memorable trip across the prairies, Washakie, chief of a band of Snake Indians, saw Bob and wanted to adopt him as a son. Washakie's son adopted the lad in a blanket, threw him on a pony and tried to make off with him. But Bob managed to escape. The Indian chief afterward explained that he meant no harm, and Bob was allowed to go with the Snake Indians up Green river for ten days.

"Washakie dressed the boy in buckskins, taught him to shoot arrows and throw the lasso, and forced him to wrestle with young Indians.

"The small Virginian whittled a wolf whistle, and when the Indians heard him blow it they kept him busy for several days cutting copies, and he was entertained by the spectacle of grown men and women 'walking about' solemnly tooting on willow whistles."

"The chief then offered to adopt the admiral-to-be and even promised in time to give one of his daughters for his wife. But Bob shook his head and refused to be beguiled. Otherwise he might now be eating government rations on an Indian reservation, instead of commanding the North Atlantic fleet."
